Religion in CO 42: Focus on Quebec (Lower Canada) 1760-1787

From: Great Britain. Colonial Office. Original Correspondence: Canada

The religious climate in Quebec during the early years of British control was characterized by turmoil in both the Roman Catholic and Anglican Churches. Tensions between the two were apparent, with British discrimination against Catholics, and Catholic distrust of the new British government.

Much of this tension impacted the Catholic Jesuit missionaries who, as of 1773, were unable to recruit new members. With the decline of the Jesuits came an increase in Anglican missions, primarily through the efforts of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

Much of the information in these select documents reflects the religious tensions at the time. However, there are some documents which discuss more administrative aspects of religion, such as clergy appointments, the resignation of the Catholic Bishop Jean-Olivier Briand, as well as correspondence with ministers and bishops.

This chart provides a breakdown of the kinds of religious documents found in CO 42. This chart was compiled from information calendared in the Canadian Public Archive's Reports for the years 1921 and 1890 (see column 4). These Reports on Canadian Archives can be found at HIL-GOV FN45 R426 1921 [and 1890].
